My dear Jena:

Many thanks for your kind letter of February 9.

It is a great comfort and consolation to me to have you express - although I have always known it - your love and admiration of Floyd.

Believe me, if they ever permit the will to be probated, that if there is any possibility of carrying on Floyd's business, I shall be very happy to do so, but Homer has so far balked me on every turn of the road. In fact, all of the family, while claiming to be with me to my face, I think are fighting me behind my back.

I have worked with Floyd, not alone doing my share of the house work and nursing and sewing and carrying on all wifely duties, but I have helped him with his business, and have never stopped in these twenty-seven years of our married life. I cannot see the justice of a law that would permit his family (who have never contributed one penny nor any assistance in any way to him, and whom he has always, since he was fourteen years of age, supported) to come in and interfere with his will and thwart his wishes and desires. It strikes me that a wife who has worked with her husband hand and hand, and who is entitled to what he has made, should decidedly be the beneficiary.

Thanks so much for your charming invitation to have me visit you. All of your family have been kind and very near to me in these years of our acquaintanceship.

Hoping to see you here very soon, I am, with best love to your wife and the girls.

Sincerely,

Adelia M. Corbin
